EDITORIAL.

A SAD blow has fallen on us this term—and fallen heavily: two of our number have been taken from us by death. It was all so sudden: one day we had them with us in the full glow of life and happiness, and it seemed only the morrow that they were gone.

“ We will grieve not, rather find
Strength in what remains behind; . . . .
In the soothing thoughts that spring
Out of human suffering,
In the faith that looks through death.”

PHILIP ARMITAGE GRIPPER.

He was born on March 27th, 1899, and came to the School in September, 1911, from the Down School, Colwall. He died on March 19th, of peritonitis, and was buried at Cromer on March 21st.

“ He was in the School for six years—six happy years. He loved his School. Dear as was his home life he always returned with unfeigned delight. For a fortnight before term began, of his own wish, he would go to no public entertainment lest he should bring back infection. He thought and saved and schemed to make his contribution to the Chapel his very own. Boyish sacrifices, yet such as not every boy would make.

His buoyant, springy walk betokened the impulsive affectionate nature that beamed behind his spectacles and so often lit up his whole face with a smile.

Few might have suspected his careful methodical way with his personal concerns; only those in his inmost confidence knew his simple, steady faith.

He was to have left a term before, but it was decided that he should 'finish out his furrow.' It was a sterner furrow than any dreamed of. A life-time crowded into a few days. His hand to the plough he never looked back. Nothing can ever efface the memory of his heroic bearing in unimaginable pain. Nothing can make us other than thankful that he has found rest."

EDWARD GLYNDWR HANMER.

He was born on November 10th, 1901, and came to the School in January, 1916, from The Belvedere, Hove. He died on March 17th, of acute phthisis, and was buried at Staplehurst on March 21st.

"Perhaps the happiest boy the School has seen, radiating in his wonderful smile and his easy talk, so unconscious of self, the joy of life he felt.

The dash and vigour of all he undertook were remarkable, and none who saw him play hockey on the ice are likely to forget the picture.

To those who taught, he was in class a welcome, stimulating focus of life.

I cannot imagine a fairer record, and had he lived, and if:—

"The thing to resist with doubled fist" had come his way, he would have doubled his fist and dealt with it.

Every boy who stops to think, hopes to leave things somehow better than he found them. Many fail to do so because 'self' intervenes.

Edward Hanmer would not have let 'self' defeat him, and he has left behind him the influence of the happiness of a valiant spirit, the cheerfulness of an eager heart."

KILLED IN ACTION.

JOHN DOUGLAS BARFORD WARWICK was a Captain in the Oxford and Bucks Light Infantry Born on June 13th, 1893, he entered the School in January, 1907, and left in July, 1910. On leaving School he joined the firm of Messrs. Ellis and Everard, and, when war broke out, he was Secretary to the Company. In October, 1910, he obtained a commission in the 5th Bedfordshires, but transferred to the Huntingdonshire Cyclist battalion on its formation. He was promoted Captain in August, 1914, within three days of war being declared. He was with his battalion on the Yorkshire coast until August, 1916, when he was sent to France and attached to the Oxford and Bucks Light Infantry. He was killed on March 10th by the bursting of a gas-shell in the entrance to his dug-out.

FROM THE FRONT.

It started by two platoons of "A" Coy. moving up to the front line as support to a Battalion going over to take a trench in front. At three they went over in four waves behind our barrage and, after a very short time, we heard "Kamerad, Kamerad," as small parties of very frightened Fritzes were hurried past by sometimes one or only two or three of our smiling fellows. At seven I took my platoon up and stopped the night, which was fairly quiet, although we were all busy getting wounded down and deepening the trenches, there being only one other officer up besides myself, and he was badly shaken. As all was quiet in the morning I came down to the Company dug-out for breakfast, and soon after we got back to our line Fritz started putting heavies and shrapnel in the new trench, and continued to do so all day long, knocking the trench in, hitting it practically every time, especially on the left sector. At four I went down to see if I couldn't get my fellows relieved, as they were very shaken. As I was going down a communication trench a heavy dropped behind me, knocked me flat and brought a piece of wood and iron piping down on to my back, numbing it for a time, but I had to get back again and got knocked down again going back, but was very lucky to get up all right. At dusk we had rumours that Fritz was going to counter-attack and everyone got very jumpy—I know I did—but at six I got orders to bring my Platoon down. However, as no one turned up to relieve me, and a new regiment came in very shaken after a terrible journey up through Fritz's barrage, I did not feel I could leave this trench; also, on putting up Very lights, I could see a lot of Fritzes waiting in this trench 30 yards off with fixed bayonets. I thought it was all up with No. 2 platoon, as for some reason the regiment on our left went out leaving about 10 bays unoccupied. I only had twenty men, and on my right two Companies of the new lot, whose officers were in a frightful muddle, and even more windy than we were. I felt very much like taking my chaps down, but, as there was a saphead near, we determined to hold it and made up a sand-bag barricade, which my sergeant and I watched all night—a top-hole fellow he was too. About nine by the Very light I saw some Fritzes moving about on our front; also he started using liquid fire on the left, and I could see our fellows bombing, so put up the distress signal for artillery support. It soon came too, a fair hail of stuff on his front and second line, which evidently put the wind up him and drove in his attack on my bit. Then Fritz I suppose thought we were coming over, so put up a terrific barrage on our 1st and 2nd line, and before long one of my fellows crawled along and said a fire bay had been blown in and eight fellows buried. We went and cleared three poor chaps, who were just alive, but they died very soon after. After about an hour the barrage lifted only to start again, when they put up signals on the right, and about two the lid was put on by one of Fritz's shells hitting a box of old Hun coloured lights on our paradocs, which went off, pink, green, blue and yellow, which our artillery took to be urgent distress signals from us and for two hours the whole place shook, as both sides put every available gun into action. About four, six Huns came over—what for, I don't know—but we got five of them down. At daylight things resumed more or less normal conditions again, and about seven we spotted a Fritz come out of a strong point he held, and jump into a shell hole. A Black Watch Tommy went over and bombed him back, so my sergeant and I and a few men went over and found the strong point held by several Huns. I told them to surrender, which four did after a good deal of threatening with my revolver. Then a Fritz officer appeared, and I told him to come over and bring all his men. I believe he would have done so only one of his men fired at me, just missing my arm, so my sergeant shot the officer at once, and I shot three of them, and I think we got over 20 of them, but, not having enough men to hold the point, had to fall back on our trench. An officer of the Sussex, who came out on my right, was shot through the heart, poor fellow. At eight o'clock we crawled back to Coy. H.Q. with 12 men out of 20. After breakfast and a short sleep we went back to reserve dug-outs for four days' so-called rest, and since then I have been in bed. J.S.B.

This is not a bad sort of country in the winter time, but one cannot reach civilization of any kind; the towns are all Arab and very poor affairs. From what I have seen of it, Mesopotamia is one vast desert, and, wherever there is a river, thickly wooded big date palms, and big date palms only. The inhabitants are interesting because they comprise such a variety of different peoples. We have fugitive Syrians and Armenians, in addition to the rather wild-looking Arab, who wears two or three little rings over the crown of his head. Our Indians find it very difficult to get on with such a motley crowd. It is sometimes unpleasantly warm by day, and we are troubled with hyaenas and jackals by night. These animals come in packs to our camps and howl most dismally. But in spite of this life is very enjoyable out here.

A.C.G.

The last two nights, too, I have been doing a patrol, the second following the result of my first report, as I located a listening post and said so on my report, with the result that last night the General sent up to say I was to take out a fighting patrol of 12 men and try to capture them. Quite all right on paper, but it's a little difficult to move 12 men about when you are only 20 yards from Fritz, and he is standing to, being very nervous. The first night I had only just got out through our wire alone when they started bombing and opened fire, so I thought I had been spotted and came in to find out later that the Patrol of ours on the right (an officer and sergeant) had worked into Fritz's trench by mistake. The sergeant was taken prisoner and the officer had an awfully near go, having to be in their wire for half-an-hour. He came in two hours later badly shaken. Last night my Patrol was a wash-out, as I had only just got clear of our wire, when one of my party slipped into a shell hole covered with cat's ice—result—much wind on Fritz's part, and many lights, and some firing, so I sent the men back and crawled along to find the post empty—the men must have got in on hearing us. I got very wet and tore my clothes pretty well, but did not get up until three this afternoon, so feel much refreshed now.

LECTURES.

CANADA.

On Wednesday, February 14th, Mr. J. R. Eccles lectured to the School on Canada. The lecturer explained at the outset that he did not intend to lecture so much as to show a number of slides, some of which had been taken by himself and some lent by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The slides were, indeed, numerous and excellent, showing scenes of Canada—town, country, lake and mountain, from the St. Lawrence to Vancouver. Passing from the towns of Quebec and Montreal, the lecturer dwelt at some length on the main features of the Great Lake district. Niagara was shown in many slides and with good effect; the famous falls were to be seen from both the American and the Canadian point of view, from the head of the fall near the tunnel which leads right behind the rush of waters and from the vessel which steams close by the seething foam below. The great grain elevator at Fort William was shown and explained; after which the lecturer passed through the vast wheat-growing tracts of Canada, through the self-important towns at the first stage of their future rapid development, till he reached the mountains of the west. The slides then followed the Canadian Pacific Railway on its great upward track through valleys, gorges, snowsheds into an Alpine scenery of peaks and glaciers. In particular a certain slide of Lake Louise was most admirable and impressive. The journey across Canada ended at Vancouver island; however, slides were shown of New York, and finally of the Mauretania—to complete the journey back again across the continent by the American route and across the Atlantic to Liverpool and home.

NEW ZEALAND.

On Friday, February 23rd, Mr. J. M. Sing, late Warden of St. Edward's School, Oxford, lectured on New Zealand. He dealt first with New Zealand in general and then with the South, and finally the North Island in particular. The lecturer drew attention to the climate of the islands, which he said was as nearly perfect as it could be. He showed us a number of excellent slides illustrating the wonderful scenery, the rapid growth of the towns, the hot water springs and many other delightful aspects of New Zealand. The devastation caused by the eruption of Mount Tongariro, the still active volcano of New Zealand, was illustrated by a series of slides, bringing out the thick mud that was deposited everywhere. Mr. Sing concluded his lecture with a few words about the original inhabitants of the islands, the Maoris.

WITH A PIONEER BATTALION AT THE FRONT.

On Thursday, March 1st, Lt.-Col. Linton Wynne Willson gave us a lecture on his experiences in France. He said that it was with diffidence that he lectured, as he knew that we had heard others relating their experiences of Active Service, but he believed that we had not heard about the doings of a Pioneer Battalion. The lecturer described the movements of the battalion from the time that it found itself in France, through its experiences on the "Somme," until the day when he left it in the region of Ypres, to come home on leave. He described an advance of His Majesty's Landships, the "Tanks," when he saw twenty-five of them making their way towards the German lines; no photograph, he explained, could give an adequate idea of the "Tanks," because it omitted the extraordinary colours that they were painted, to render them less visible. This lecture was doubly interesting, first, because two Old Boys, A. L. Crockford and H. R. Lowe, are in this battalion, so that we heard exactly how they won their Military Crosses, and because it told us more of what goes on "Out Beyond."

THE DOLOMITES.

On Wednesday, March 7th, Mr. J. R. Eccles fulfilled the promise that he had made at his lecture on Canada, by showing his slides of the Dolomites. "The rock," he said, "of which the Dolomites are formed is ordinarily white, but weathers into yellows and pinks; thus, especially at sunrise and sunset, most wonderful colours seem to light up the rocks." The scenery of the Tyrol, which the slides portrayed so admirably, was very beautiful and quite unlike anything to be seen in this country: there would be pine forests and ordinary mountain scenery up to a certain height, and above that the bare rock standing like a crown to it all. In spite of the lecturer saying that no real idea of the Dolomites could be obtained without colour, yet the slides he showed indicated most clearly how wonderful must be the scenery of this part of the Austrian Tyrol.

IN THE TRENCHES.

(7.30 P.M.)

The last faint glimmer of the sunset glow,
Lights up the stricken copse—the hill-side bare :
And casts pale shadows o'er the shell-scarred snow
In hopeless challenge to the star-shell's glare.

Silent the guns : and from that distant track
Flanked by its row of shattered trees—no sound.
Some rifle shot startles with angry crack
The silent trench, lashing the frozen ground.

The sentry gruffly questions the patrol
That, ghostlike, crawls along the straggling wire ;
Worn-out humanity exacts its toll,
And sleep falls heavy round each dying fire.

THE SATURDAY MUSIC.

Anything out of the beaten track of School routine is a blessing. This term has seen a new experiment in the "Saturday Music"—a series of five short Concerts at which attendance was purely voluntary—and what a difference that makes! He who cares for music enjoys and learns much. He who cares not stays away and does not cloud the air with boredom. We come for music, and music clear and true we get.

The cunning with which the sequence was arranged provokes admiration. We seem to see our great impresario at work in his study devising somewhat in this wise: "Suppose I must begin—it will probably fall flat—I'll tell them I don't want them to come—sooner they didn't—the fewer the better. What to give them? Something bright and varied. Can't do better than Chopin—they can get a fair idea of Chopin with seven items—expect they will be bored." Then he sits down to the piano and Chopin walks abroad sparkling, romantic, exuberant. Pessimism and boredom are slain.

For No. 2. 'Turn on the violin—less likely to be bored—tasty sandwich instead of dry bread, as it were.' Beethoven, Mozart, Brahms, Spohr, Mendelssohn. Observe the type of music, in complete contrast to No. 1. Its German character does not diminish aught of our enjoyment. How could it when Mr. Greatorex and Mr. Southward were in superb form?

'A 'Cellist for the third Concert. Mr. F. R. Winton. Lucky to be able to get hold of a first-class man. Should prove an attraction—hope he won't be bored'—So at it the three of them go. Brahms and Mozart. One Pianoforte Trio they gave entire, and in it the three enthusiasts dominated the audience with their fire and exaltation.

For the fourth—a brilliant idea. The boys shall work it themselves—that will be a draw. So it was. Two pianists, two singers, a violin, a cello and a choir. Roberts and Farnell we know, the one brilliant, the other thoughtful, Bernard and Gregory were new and both showed good taste and style, Douglass pleasant and unaffected, Yates clear and manly, the little choir bright and accurate. It was indeed a goodly programme, and justly popular.

The Fifth Concert. 'Miss Wells shall be the bait. We will have a cosmopolitan programme. I'll play something comic—Golliwog's Cakewalk and such like—Mr. Southward will help out'—Gluck, Dvorak, Debussy, John Ireland, 'Dohnánzi.' He was right again. Miss Wells brought out the spirit of her songs with vivacity and naturalness that won rapt attention—and the instrumental music was no less good than before. Tried by any test the series was a success.

The fact is that we have in our midst two fine musicians and executants (by no means the same thing) who can combine beautiful sound and strong sense with consummate art and who realise that to quicken real interest in music "example is better than precept."

WAR IN 1915.

Imagine if you can, a dark night, but stars overhead—it is somewhat oppressive, and an air of unrest hangs over everyone. We are ready to go up to the trenches, and a suppressed excitement hangs over us all, as we know we are about to take part in a great battle. We are lined up in the street in fours with all our equipment on and rations for the next day or two. As we pass the gap between the houses we see a red glare in the sky to our right—it is probably Lens burning. Now we have left the village and strike the open, and are going across fields pitted everywhere with shell holes, and the lines of trenches show up the chalk white on the ground; at one time we could not go along here at all, as the shells of the enemy fell thickly. Eventually we come to an incline and on our left is the ruined outline of a large brewery—as the troops mount the incline, so is their silhouette outlined against the fiery glow on the horizon, and at once thoughts of the French Revolution and the guillotine spring before us. Now the noise of the guns increases, and tongues of fire shoot out on all sides of us. We are now crossing the railway, and arrive on the Lens-Bethune road—two months ago this would have been impossible—we now strike across and go over a veritable maze of trenches. Ammunition waggons are to be seen everywhere, delivering shells to the batteries; just as dawn is breaking we arrive at what was once our front line—all the barbed wire is broken and in many places the debris in the trench tell that the Hun's artillery has done good work. We are in reserve here, and rest for a few hours but are ready to move on at a moment's notice. Noon arrives, and at once a roar of cannon breaks forth—the noise is deafening and quite indescribable—the sharp report of the smaller guns, the boom of the large, the buzz, whistle and scream of the missiles as they hurtle overhead makes one feel as if one's head would come off. Presently on our left a huge cloud of dense white smoke curls and writhes up and floats and rolls towards the German lines, then brown gas, then green gas, the air literally teeming with sounds. Then the Germans reply vigorously—fire shells, coal box and shrapnel and high explosives alternately burst in a line as one shell upon our trench—portions of sand-bags, stones, earth, equipment and human particles fly everywhere—the buzz of the pieces of shell and the deafening report and shake of the ground as shell after shell thunders down. This goes on till dusk, when the order comes down "Prepare to move." Then at three paces interval we get out of the trench and go across the open to the German lines. Shall we get there? Every conceivable missile is whistling through the air and every moment one expects to be hit. Now we see a few of the noble wounded; arms, heads, legs, all bandaged, but still they can just walk, and slowly and painfully helping one another, they come to the Lone Tree, and go to dug-outs to wait for a space. Then on right down to the road, where that welcome vehicle, the Red Cross Motor Ambulance, awaits them. Eventually we reach what was a German trench—the shells have made havoc of it, but they cannot touch the dug-outs which are wooden lined and are approached by steps 30ft. under the ground. These are now full of wounded—the groans are horrible to hear. "Well, how did you get on?" one asked a Scotchman. "About 50 left out of me lot, I think," and the same answer is received by all and from all those who took part in the charge. Oh, the braveness of those poor souls whose limbs are shattered, and yet they say, "Oh, well, it's the war," and so one hears little incidents of men who are worth the V.C. many times over, but they have not been noticed. Then one has the misfortune to have to make the return journey to the motor oneself. Across the open we go with other wounded, each trying to help the other—shells can find their way just as well in the dark as in the light, as one very often finds out. Over trenches, round shells holes we go and eventually reach the Red Cross care nearly exhausted. Water is always in great demand on these occasions, and is often worth its weight in gold. Soon off we go, and pass through what was once Vermelles—poor place, no whole houses exist, and great shell holes in the streets tell the tale of how fierce and anguinary must have been the battles for that place. Then we arrive at the dressing stations, and there the poor men undergo tortures whilst having their gashes tended. The question frequently comes up—Why do they not use more anaesthetics? It would mean so much to the men and the cost as compared to the good done is nil. And so the war rolls on, and takes its toll of human life. God grant it may end soon.

BOMBING ON THE SOMME.

It was eleven p.m., and the following day's orders had just come through from headquarters "Six machines to bomb — at 5.30 a.m." The Squadron Commander would appoint a "Flight" for the job, and the Flight Commander would appoint the pilots, who, in turn, would warn the mechanics.

There would be little sleep for those men that night; for they would have to overhaul and perhaps repair their machines, and load them with bombs.

At about half-past four in the morning the pilots would be aroused, and, after having warmed themselves with steaming tea or cocoa, they saunter up to the aerodrome; where their machines would be awaiting them. At 5.15 they would don their heavy leather coats, and fur-lined caps, and climb into their aeroplanes.

The engines are started, and warmed, and the pilots cover their eyes with goggles. They then have a few moments in which to smoke a pipe of peace with the world, until the C.O. appears, a buzz on the telephone is heard. The engines are restarted, and, at a signal from the Commander, they "taxi" out on to the aerodrome preparatory to taking off, and the bombing raid has begun.

There are ten machines in all, four of them acting as escort to ward off the attacks of hostile aircraft while the bombing is in progress. The aeroplanes leave the ground in a long stream, the leader having a triangular flag attached to his tail planes or wings. Quickly getting into their required positions, they circle round the aerodrome until they receive a signal from the ground, giving them permission to make for the lines.

Climbing steadily all the time they follow their leader Hunwards, and cross the lines at varying heights, from ten thousand to eight thousand feet, spreading out to avoid the chances of being hit by "Archie" (anti-aircraft guns.) They hope to avoid detection, but immediately they are within range, "crump, crump, crump" they hear, and the "Archie" is letting them have it hot. Three greenish brown puffs of smoke are to be seen above them. "Crump, crump," and this time below.

For the next few minutes shells burst all around them, and then it will suddenly stop. No doubt the Germans are mounting their guns on lorries and taking them further back, in order to get another shot at them.

At last their objective heavens in sight; the bomb sights are set, and the pilots get ready to drop them. As each machine passes over the target the pilot releases his bombs, banks steeply round, and makes for home. His day's work is finished, and he is just beginning to think what an easy time he has had, when "crump, crump, crump," and the "Archie" is letting him have it hot again. Unhampered by his bombs, he swerves to the right and left, climbing and diving alternately to lessen the chances of being hit. Suddenly the firing stops, and the lines are in sight.

His troubles, however, are not yet over. "Pop, pop, pop, pop," he hears. He looks round to see who is firing, "pop, pop, pop," and he observes that a wire on his machine has been shot away. Screwing his head round, he sees three enemy biplanes diving almost vertically on top of him. He dives also, then suddenly "zooms" up, turning steeply at the same time. He is then facing his opponents, and, with a steady pressure of his finger, his gun is brought into action. He is making straight for his opponents, and if one or the other does not turn away, there will be a collision.

His attackers rapidly grow bigger and bigger, and, when he thinks that nothing can save an accident, they swerve away exposing at the same time the whole of their machines to fire. The bomber, firing hard, follows them as they dive to earth, but, remembering a nice hot meal which is awaiting him, he gives up the chase after a few thousand feet. As he crosses the lines he is once more subject to a halo of shells, but he reaches his aerodrome in safety, and lands.

"Beastly cold, wasn't it?" is his only remark, as he goes down to the mess for the meal he has been looking forward to for so long.

THE MINIATURE RANGE.

September 1914 saw the Junior O.T.C.'s looking for ways in which they could increase and improve the supply of embryo officers. Within a few weeks reports began to reach the country of the astounding results which the Expeditionary Force, the old regular army, had achieved; not with innumerable machine guns—not with devastating quantities of shrapnel and H.E., but with rifles. It was this that gave us the impetus to build a new range with greater accommodation and more facilities, and we set to work to do it. There were difficulties and delays, and we had to remember the more urgent needs of others, but we feel that there was some ill luck in not obtaining our wish until early in 1917.

In February, 1917, Messrs. Graham and Latham handed over to us the new Miniature Range. Its position is within a few yards of the old site, but clear of the wood, in the corner of the Waterloo Farm field. It faces East and West and consists of a Stop Butt and a hut for the Firing Point. The former is fitted with a Solano and Trough apparatus, while the latter, an attractive looking building of rough cast walls and thatched roof, allows of eight shooting at a time with seating accommodation for some sixteen more. The light both on the butts, which face west, and at the firing point, has proved to be excellent.

This then is as good a range as anyone could demand, and let us here thank those pre-war patriots whose commissions in the T.F. earned us the grants which have assisted us so materially in defraying the cost—and all those who in past years have practised and made themselves "efficient" (more grants) under less easy conditions. Present boys it is certain are seeing to it that they will be "efficient" and more—that they will become sufficiently expert in the various branches to be able, when their turn comes, to instruct men put under their charge.

LIBRARY.

The prominent feature in the Library this term is the conversion of the gallery of the Big School into a Reading Room. The arrangement is not ideal; but until a real room can be obtained it is the best available. With the help of the Governors it has been possible to insert radiators which have given sufficient warmth, even in the recent cold weather; and the kindness of the Headmaster has provided the room for the present with a fine table. As time goes on it may be possible to improve the comfort of the room. And, meanwhile, it is a great thing to have got all the bookcases on the same level, corridor and Reading Room being practically continuous. This has enabled certain books to be put into easier circulation, the result of which is satisfactorily marked by increased entries in the Register. In fact the use made of the books is in general on the increase.

Nor is there any cessation of presentation of books. We have to express our gratitude for the following:—

DEBATING SOCIETY.

A meeting of the Society was held in the Double Classroom at 8.15 p.m., on Saturday, February 10th, when Mr. W. E. Woodhouse moved "that in the opinion of this house the Allies would have been better advised in a concentration on the Western Front, than in a dissipation of their energy in divergent operations."

D. C. P. Phelps opposed.

J. Jefferson spoke third.

F. G. Berthoud spoke fourth.

The Hon. President, Mr. C. H. Tyler, C. V. Rouse, and nine others spoke.

The House divided as follows:—

For the motion ... 20 votes.

Against the motion 26 votes.

The motion was, therefore, lost by 6 votes.

On Saturday, March 10th, a meeting of the Society was held in the Double Classroom at 8.15 p.m., when Mr. A.

Zaiman moved "that in the opinion of this House the 'neutral' attitude of President Wilson is only the result of his being under the influence of the pro-German party in America."

Mr. C. H. C. Osborne opposed.

J. P. Heyworth spoke third.

G. S. Bell spoke fourth.

The Hon. President, Sir Herbert Roberts, Mr. Charles Roberts, and 16 others also spoke.

The House divided as follows:—

For the motion ... 19 votes.

Against the motion 31 votes.

The motion was, therefore, lost by 12 votes.

SCIENTIFIC AND ENGLISH LITERATURE SOCIETIES.

On Saturday, February 3rd, at a joint meeting of the Societies, Mr. C. H. Tyler read a paper on "The beginnings of Scientific Knowledge."

The purport of Mr. Tyler's paper was to trace briefly the origin of the scientific spirit rather than to state actual achievement, which was referred to only by way of illustration. It was shown by reference to primitive man how observation is stimulated by, and knowledge originates with, practical needs; how these were the only motive impulse far into civilised times, as in ancient Egypt; and how it was not till a period comparatively recent, in historical Greece, that needs purely intellectual prompted men to inquire for inquiry's sake—to search behind phenomena for their causes, and for the principles that regulate their order.

On Sunday, March 4th, at another joint meeting, R. G. W. Farnell read a paper on "Schumann and the Romantic Period of Music," which he and P. M. Barr had jointly composed.

The Societies should be congratulated on striking out a new line with a paper on a musical subject. Also they were fortunate in finding two such capable exponents as Farnell and Barr. The joint production was in every way a success, and it was obvious that much careful research had been given to the subject. The introductory account of the Romantic movement, for which Barr was responsible, showed a critical spirit and a sympathetic insight into the subject. The latter part of the paper was mainly devoted to Schumann, and Farnell gave us an exhaustive account of the composer's influence on music and almost a miniature biography of him as well. When Farnell had finished reading the paper Mr. Greatorex kindly gave us several examples of Schumann's piano music, illustrating many points that had been made in both parts of the paper, and that had come up for discussion. We shall look forward to more papers of this kind on the fine arts.

O.G. NEWS.

The Lt.-Colonel of the Battalion to which Captain Warwick was attached, wrote in a letter to Mrs. Warwick:—

"Your son was killed in action this morning by a gas shell, which burst in the entrance to his dug-out. He will be a great loss to this battalion, both as an officer and a friend. As an officer, he was quite one of the most capable and conscientious I have ever had the pleasure to serve with, and after joining us in September last he very rapidly gained the affection and respect of all ranks."

We have received the following account of the circumstances under which O. Hawksley won the Military Medal at the Battle of the Ancre in November last:—

"In the first assault the Lewis gun crew, of which he was a member, was caught by machine gun fire, and all but Hawksley and another man were knocked over. Hawksley was hit on his ammunition pouch and thrown into a shell hole. Scrambling out, he bandaged and carried into safety all who were not killed, under heavy fire, and then went on to the objective. There he found his gun and the only other survivor of the crew, with a remnant of the attackers. In the absence of any officers he organised things until N.C.O.'s came up, and then kept his gun going all day with excellent results."

R. A. Bigland, who has been out in France for two years in the Friends' Ambulance Unit as a chauffeur, is at present working with the French in the Champagne district.

J. S. Rowntree has also joined the Friends' Ambulance Unit at the Front.

W. A. Turner, who passed 24th into Woolwich in February, 1916, has just passed, 14th on the list, into the Royal Engineers.

J. A. Nicholson and R. A. Wyrley Birch have also passed out of Woolwich.

Capt. G. V. Hotblack has been appointed to the General Staff of the Tyneside Garrison.

Capt. O. W. Tyler has been appointed Staff Officer to the Chief Engineer of the Corps to which he belongs.

L. A. Garrett, E. M. Royds Jones, C. B. Gregory, and J. G. Warwick are at Training Centres.

SCHOOL NOTES.

It was with regret that we heard that Mr. W. H. A. Whitworth, who is attached to the R.F.C., has recently been wounded.

The trustees of the late Mr. Phené Spiers, F.S.A., have presented to the School an interesting collection of geological specimens, consisting mainly of mineral and rocks, which have been added to the School collection. Mr. Spiers, who was for many years Master of the Architectural School at the Royal Academy, travelled very widely as a student, and most of these specimens were collected on his travels.

The following have received their Hockey colours:—J. P. Heyworth, H. Yates, J. P. W. Evershed, B. S. de Segundo.

During the long cold spell in January and February the School Meteorologist recorded two abnormally low temperatures, the minimum thermometer recording 0° F. and—2° F., i.e., 34 degrees of frost, on two succeeding nights.

The big explosion on Friday, January 19th, was heard quite distinctly about 7.3 p.m. at the School. This was, as far as one could ascertain, almost exactly ten minutes after its occurrence. One account in the paper said that the fire broke out at 6.45 and the explosion took place eight minutes later, i.e., at 6.53 p.m.

A Collection on Sunday, February 25th, for Dr. Barnardo's Homes reached the sum of £10. This will be devoted to maintaining a boy at Watts' Naval Training College.
